Parents and kids team up at World Values Day event

Bengaluru: Families, their bonds, the values they cherish and the ethics that elders want to instill in their wards were on display at 'The Great Values Olympics-2023' organised by city-based Val-Ed Initiatives on Sunday, to mark World Values Day in Rajajinagar.

Thirty-eight families from 20 schools joined in games and exploration of values. The theme — Values Bring Us Together — resonated at the event that encouraged collaboration between parents and children in activities revolving around aspects like empathy, resilience, connection, and happiness.

Many parents whom TOI spoke with found it eye-opening, realising they didn't know their kids as well as they thought. The event which saw medals awarded aimed to instill values in kids and strengthen parent-child bonds. Games included blindfold exercises to promote empathy, dance and music for happiness, deciphering symbols for connection and challenging tasks of resilience like locking hands and threading needles.

Shruthi SK, mother of Kiran Kruthi, a fourth grader at Carmel School, said: "Unlike borning lectures, this had exciting games. Since it was linked to values, it brought back our old days. These activities not only improve physical fitness, but also enhance confidence and character."

Vignesh Pillai, a class 10 student, shared: "Today, I learned a lot about what's going on within my family. I discovered many things about my mother and felt that there is much I don't know."

Along with math, kids learn about truth & love

Social Enterprise Teaches Values To Schoolchildren

Sumitha.Rao@timesgroup.com

Bengaluru: It's a post-lunch class at Florence School in Basveshwarnagar. Children begin the class with five minutes of meditation. And then the fun begins: A discussion on love and positivity in between their math and chemistry lessons.

That's just a glimpse of one of the Val-Ed classes in this school. The students discuss the unique positive qualities of the Kauravas, such as ambition and never give-up attitude. Or how Shakuni won over everything. From Mahabharata to current day scenario, the students discuss various issues related to life.

Forgive, Forget!

Bobby Rakhia, a teacher with Val-Ed, says they have seen the impact of the lessons on children. "There were two girls who were close friends and would always sit together. But in the past two months, it was not the same; they were not seen together in classes. Recently, when I spotted them together, I was curious and asked them about it. Their reply was so warm. They said they had differences of opinion and fought over them. But the value clock put up in the classroom once showed 'Forgive and Forget'. They observed that and decided to patch up and go beyond their differences," she says.

'The baap of all leaders'

Mayank, an alumnus of the School of Inspired Leadership, Gurgaon, takes classes for management students. He says the classes are completely non-religious and apolitical. "Depicting Mahabharata for management studies is one of the components of my classes. Krishna is the baap of all leaders. There's a Krishna in you too! Discover him!" he says in his classes.

August 2013, has collaborated with several colleges and schools in Bengaluru and Belagavi. The brain behind this initiative is Mayank Solanki, 30, a social entrepreneur who started Val-Ed after quitting his job in an MNC.

Mayank was one of the top five persons chosen in the 'I lead Bengaluru' event launched by the Times of India in 2013. "It was then I got clear on what I wanted to do. The corporate job was not serving the purpose of my life," says Mayank, who now teaches values to school children and management students. "When values are taught at a tender age, they remain with them forever. Classroom is only used for discussion, but the values we teach are in fact experimented outside class. The Val-Ed team becomes a part of the school's assembly.

assessment, sports and annual day events once roped in with a school," adds Mayank.

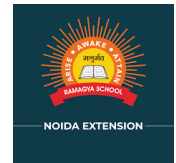

Val-Ed has got six teachers who take a 45-minute class once a week. "The bottom line is that apart from academics, children need values. The classes include story-telling, watching videos and discussions to help them develop eloquence skills, confidence and interactive skills," says Bobby Rakhia, a teacher with Val-Ed.

They bring guests like police officers, dancers, artists, doctors and other professionals to address the students once in a while and tell them their life stories. These classes have helped the children perform better in academics too and they focus better on their studies, adds Bobby.

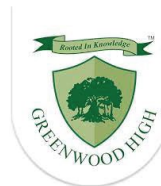

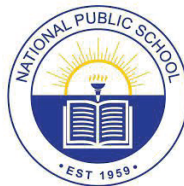

This method of teaching values has also helped children deal with matters at home, says Bobby. At a parent-teacher meeting at Florence school, which Val-Ed volunteers also attend, some parents pointed at positive behavioural changes in children. The value education is not only for children, but also schools and parents, adds Sourabh Jain, admin head at Val-Ed.

Today through this blindfolded and charan sparsh event, I have realised there's so much that we as parents are unaware of and we really need to focus on our parenting style. Thank you saksham for this lifetime realization. I would request schools to surely continue to have such engagements with Val-Ed regularly because we as parents also need to learn, Unlearn & Relearn a lot of things
